

Successful election to fellowship of the Royal College of Physicians (RCP) requires eligible candidates to demonstrate the values expected of a fellow, which go beyond standard contractual obligations and support and deliver clinical excellence. Fellows of the RCP are established senior clinicians and will usually have been in substantive employment at consultant or equivalent level for several years. Eligibility for fellowship of the RCP is not, however, dependent on length of time served. It is rather a marker of impact and achievement.

Candidates must:

- > be licensed to practise
- > be participating in annual appraisal and revalidation
- > make a declaration of good standing.

Candidates may propose themselves or be proposed by a current fellow. Both methods are initiated through an open, joint proposal that requires engagement of the candidate and support of a sponsoring fellow. Both types of proposal are treated on equal merit.

How do I propose myself for fellowship?

- > Ask a current RCP fellow whom you work alongside or have worked with recently if they are happy to act as your sponsor. They will be asked to support your proposal with a short statement, a bit like a reference. If you do not work closely with any RCP fellows, a colleague in a formal organisational leadership role is an acceptable alternative.
- > Go to the RCP self-proposal webform (basic information only is required to initiate the process): this is not onerous or time-consuming!
- > Complete the form, including your supporting information (please read the Supporting information guidance document) and details of your sponsoring fellow and another endorsing colleague.
- > Click to share the form with your chosen sponsoring fellow, who can support your proposal with some additional information.
- > Once they have returned it, submit the jointly completed form via the automated process. This will trigger endorsement requests from a senior colleague within your organisation and your college tutor.
- > The automated process will also assign your anonymised proposal to a scoring panel.

What do I need to do if someone has proposed me for fellowship?

- > You will already have a sponsor for your proposal, but will need to identify a senior local colleague to endorse your proposal in the next stage.
- > Go to the RCP proposal webform via the fellowship portal. Update or amend any personal details where necessary.
- > Complete the supporting information section. Your sponsor will have already submitted details of your area of interest and breadth of practice, but you should use the supporting information section to expand on this with further detail or additional activities you would like considered.
- > Click to return the form to your sponsoring fellow, who will then submit the jointly completed form via the automated process. This will trigger an endorsement request from the senior colleague within your organisation whom you have nominated.
- > The automated process will also assign your anonymised proposal to a scoring panel.

FAQs

How long will it take to start the process?

It is very simple to initiate the process with the agreement of your sponsor. Basic information will include your name and date of birth, place of work, home address and GMC code. Make sure that you have details and contact information for both your sponsor and an endorsing colleague. More detailed information on completing the webform is available in our guidance documents on the RCP website.

Should I propose myself or wait to be proposed by a current fellow?

Our revised fellowship process has been designed to make the process more accessible and equitable and is a joint proposal with a sponsor, whoever initiates the process. If you are eligible and are keen to be part of the fellowship of the RCP, then propose yourself without delay!

What is the difference between a sponsor and an endorser, and whom should I ask?

Both sponsors and endorsers should know you professionally and be able to support and validate your application with first-hand knowledge of your practice. Sponsors should be fellows of the RCP, while endorsers do not have to be. We request, however, that endorsers are in formal leadership roles in your organisation, eg clinical director or your appraiser, and that this relationship be specified. In the event that a candidate does not have a local fellow to sponsor them, a colleague in a formal organisational leadership role is an acceptable alternative.
